DRY VICTORIES IN JERSEY SET ASIDE

The inalienable right of a soldier to say whether his home town shall or shall not be placed in the dry column was affirmed yesterday by Chief Justice Gummere, in Newark, when he set aside the elections by which Montclair, Cald-well Borough and East Orange had the liquor traffic extracted from within their municipal confines last March.

Justice Gummere ruled favorably or Justice Gummere ruled favorably on the contention of the "wet" forces that many soldiers who were away in camps and cantonments had been deprived of their right of suffrage because ballots were not delivered to them. The "dry" forces fought back with the argument that the Secretary of State of New Jersey had sent ballots to every soldier whose name and camp he could learn, but many of the ballots so sent did not contain the name of the unit to which contain the name of the unit to which the voter was attached and they were returned without having been delivered

Justice Gummere ruled, however, that he could see no flaw in the election in south Orange township, which also went dry, and so that community remains in the cluster of saloonless municipalities with which New Jersey is dotted.
